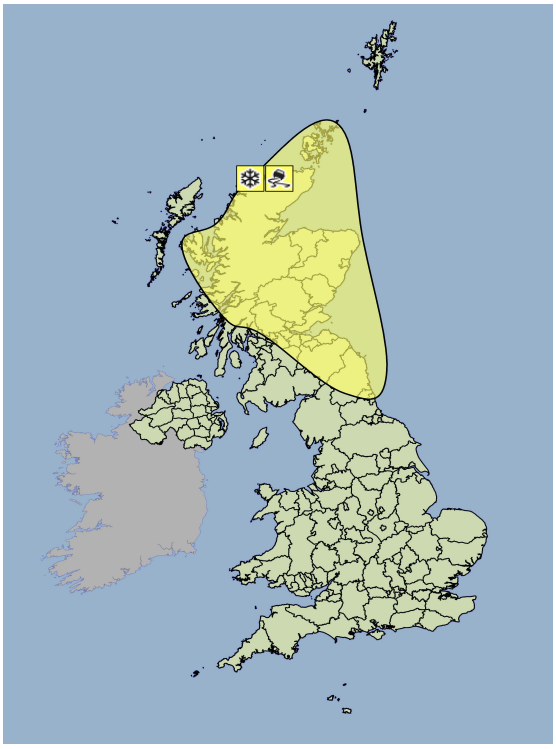
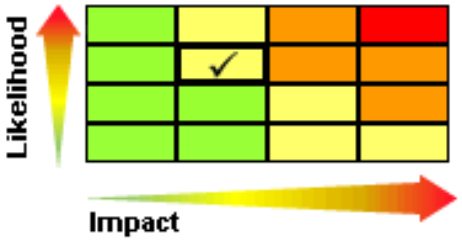
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of showers or longer spells of rain, sleet and snow is expected to move SE across Scotland and the NE of England on Saturday evening and through the early hours of Sunday. At low levels this will mainly fall as rain and sleet, with snow more likely above 100 m where accumulations of a further 5 cm are possible. In addition a widespread frost will lead to icy patches forming on untreated surfaces as clear spells develop.

The wintry showers will become lighter and less frequent later on Saturday night and into Sunday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 20:00 on Sat, 21st Nov 2015 until 10:00 on Sun, 22nd Nov 2015

Showers, a mixture of rain, sleet and snow, occasionally heavy, are expected Saturday evening and into Sunday morning. Some slight accumulations of snow are expected especially, but not exclusively, over high ground. Icy patches will also become a hazard, forming on untreated surfaces or where treatment is washed off by showers.

Please be aware of potential for difficult traveling conditions and minor disruption.
